

IGG Software Goes Green

Putney, Vermont - IGG Software, LLC announced Thursday that it has begun buying 100% of the electricity used to run their main headquarters from green, renewable sources.

IGG Software enrolled in Green Mountain Power's alternative energy plan called "Greener Mountain Power" this fall. The program allows the company to buy all of their electricity from renewable sources, such as wind and hydro.

"We think it's very important for individuals and companies alike to be making more sustainable choices whenever they are able" said IGG Software president and founder Ian Gillespie. "As a business, we see protecting our environment and our future as our responsibility too".

IGG Software is committed to developing powerful, yet easy to use personal and small business applications. Since its inception, IGG Software's products have been recognized by Apple as well as in MacWorld, MacUser, MacFormat, and many other prominent Macintosh publications. IGG Software, LLC was started by Dr. Ian Gillespie in 2002 to develop enterprise strength applications for everyday Mac users. More information is available at www.iggsoftware.com.
